

CANDIED BLOOD

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Table Of Contents.....	1
Prelude.....	3
Candied Blood.....	5
Characters: Billy Walder.....	7
Characters: Margaret Walder.....	8
Introduction and Ground Floor.....	9
Moves.....	11
First Floor: Chocolate.....	13
First Floor Physical Changes.....	14
Second Floor: Blueberries.....	16
Second Floor Physical Changes.....	17
Third Floor: Cows.....	19
Third Floor Physical Changes.....	20
Fourth Floor: Sharks.....	22
Fourth Floor Physical Changes.....	23
Fifth Floor: Marshmallows.....	25
Fifth Floor Physical Changes.....	26
Finale.....	28
Conclusion.....	29
Character Creation Tables.....	31
How To Run Candied Blood.....	33
Credits.....	35

PRELUDE

Twenty years ago, the legendary Billy Walder, of Walder's Candy Factory, gave the entirety of his confectionary empire to a poor child who pulled a platinum ticket out of a chocolate bar.

Ten years ago, that child died in an ill-fated space flight. Five years ago, Mr. Walder died in a sudden chocolate ooze vat accident.

Yesterday, a woman claiming to be Mr. Walder's widow, Margaret Walder, sent you a letter. "Come to the candy factory," she wrote. "Claim your inheritance."

Today you stand on the brambly, neglected hill overlooking Mr. Walder's flagship factory. Its lights are still on, and delivery trucks still arrive each day expecting shipments of fresh candy. The factory lives, eats, and breathes without you.

You; a fail-child scion. Backstabber, ladder puller, and corporate climber. None of it ever brought you the taste of success that your famous name demands. This is your last chance for greatness.

CANDIED BLOOD

Candied Blood is a Transversion for use with the To Change system. To play, you will need one player to act as the Storyteller, who will play the role of narrator, Factory, and Margaret Walder.

The other two to four players assume the roles of the Inheritors. They are the 3rd cousins, aunts, uncles, and distant nephews of the Walder family.

To create their Inheritor, players should determine their character's name and their familial connection to Billy. The players should write down their reason for seeking ownership over the candy factory, as well as personality flaw that holds them back from forming healthy relationships. Use the table on page X to assign those randomly or choose your own goals and flaws.

Remember that the Inheritors should be awful and despicable people, but their journey through the candy factory may help them unlearn their harmful behavior or reinforce their worst tendencies. Either way, the factory will change them. Change them into candy, of course.

CHARACTERS: BILLY WALDER

The larger-than-life confectioner who casts his shadow over everything the Inheritors have ever known. Billy was always a frenetic creator, acting like an inventor with the soul of a child. He had his tantrums and dour moods, but everyone put up with his lows so that they profit from his highs.

More growth, more exploitation, more candy. The shareholders always wanted more. The more power he controlled, the more the market controlled him. Giving away empire brought him no solace; the claw marks of industry and greed were buried too deep. The magic spark inside him died long before he did.

Billy does not speak to the players directly, he is dead after all, but his ghost haunts the factory. Every misdeed and flaw speaks to his corrupted vision in some way, yet the imperfections are also what Billy loved. Whenever the Inheritors choose to embrace Billy's passion for wild, untamed candy, they take one change in a random attribute and may draw any number of cards from the deck on their next test to that attribute.

CHARACTERS: MARGARET WALDER

Billy's mysterious wife, the business and brains of Walder's enterprise. She wove serpent coils through her husband's hands, always tempting him to greater and greater ambition, no matter the human cost. When Billy abandoned her dreams, Margaret retreated into secrecy to wait for his death and plan her grand vision. She has a deep respect for Billy's creations, though she cares little for the man behind them.

Margaret grew up very sickly and frequently disabled, but Walder technology helped improve her health. However, it wasn't enough for her to be 'normal', she had to be superior. After extensive remodeling, her new body is 90% cybernetics, making her immune to the transformative effects of the factory.

She sees the Inheritors as flailing, broken pawns for her to manipulate at will. Her loyalty lies with whichever Inheritor is closest to being completely transformed. Pride will not allow her to share victory with anyone, discarding any ally as soon as they lose their usefulness.

INTRODUCTION AND GROUND FLOOR

Margaret Walder greets the Inheritors at the ground floor of the factory, introducing herself and establishing the rules of this competition.

On the sixth floor, a biometric scanner locks the remainder of Walder's fortune and the control panel of the factory. The one of the Inheritors can open it, but it will not respond to them until they have proven capable of subjugating fixing the other floors. Margaret tells them not to worry too much about repairs are needed exactly.

The factory has five other floors, each of them afflicted with various maintenance and environmental issues that arised as a consequence of the factory's connection to extra-dimensional candy realms. This also creates a "physiotrophic candy field phenomenon". Margaret acts dismissive if the players don't understand it, offering them a selection of military weapons and exploration equipment. All the tools are leftovers from the last team that disappeared while exploring the factory.

The ground floor has a regular office building layout, infiltrated by cancerous growths of candy energy leaking from the other floors of the factory. As Margaret leads the Inheritors to the central glass elevator, they encounter a wild Lompra among the abandoned cubicles.

The Lompra are wolf-like creatures with gumdrop eyes, sharp candy corn teeth, eight licorice limbs, and an acidic cotton candy tail. They act as the biologic defense system for the factory, appearing more frequently the more the Inheritors try to adjust the factory to their whims. Margret lets the Inheritors struggle against the first Lompra on their own, before dispatching it in in a show of her strength and brutality.

MOVES

Physiotrophic Candy Field: Once inside the factory, the inheritors will begin to experience changes as the physiotrophic candy field reacts to their hunger. Whenever a player succumbs, the physiotrophic candy field explodes outwards and triggers a change in every other Inheritor inside the factory. The player who triggered the field can choose what attribute it changes in the others.

All Mental attribute changes are the same regardless of which floor the players are on, but Physical attribute changes will differ depending on the floor when they are taken on.

Hunger: Each time a player enters a new floor, they gain a point of Hunger. For each point of Hunger, players draw one additional card on all draws. Players take four points of damage for each point of Hunger over two.

Eating candy removes one point of Hunger and gives one change in an attribute of the player's choice.

Nearly all of the dangers of the factory can be overcome through eating them.

MA changes:

MA1: You can sense the otherwise invisible physiotrophic candy field. It feels like a squishy pink aura that emanates from everything sweet and swells rapidly whenever anyone transforms.

MA2: You can manipulate the physiotrophic candy field and focus it onto people or away from people, to enhance or delay its effects.

MA3: You can see the physiotrophic candy field and are more adept at handling it. With a successful test to MA, you can ignore all changes given by the physiotrophic candy field on the current factory floor.

MF changes:

MF1: You want to eat the candy. Eating candy heals one Mental attribute damage, even if you're not hungry.

MF2: You want to eat living candy people. Eating people who have at least two changes to PF heals you for one Mental attribute damage and one Physical attribute damage.

MF3: You want to be eaten yourself. Being eaten (at least in parts) heals all Mental attribute damage but deals one Physical attribute damage.

FIRST FLOOR: CHOCOLATE

The glass elevator doors open and a wave of chocolate washes over the Inheritor's shoes while they stare into a pitch-black coco swamp. The first floor is heavily flooded with bitter chocolate that has damaged the electrical wiring. The Inheritors will be tasked with draining the chocolate levels, adding much needed sweetener, restoring pressure to the pipes to remove clogged balls of stagnant chocolate. All this before they can finally restore power to get the lights working again.

Dangers on this floor include:

- Broken pipes spray scalding hot chocolate.
- Crushed by an avalanche of giant truffles.
- Sucked into a pressurized transport tube.
- Falling chocolate spike stalactites.
- Drowning in a heavy fudge tar pit.
- Shredded by hidden coco powder grater.
- Plugged and filled by a glaze piping bag.
- Camouflaged Lompras.

This floor should test the Inheritor's fear of the dark, trusting their companions to hold a light over their shoulder and not stab them in the back.

FIRST FLOOR PHYSICAL CHANGES

PA changes:

PA1: Your skin turns dark brown, or vanilla white.

PA2: Cracks form on your body, splintering off chunks of brittle chocolate when you bend.

PA3: Ribbons of strawberry and caramel syrup twist through your hair. Lumps of salty nuts and juicy cherries grow inside your bulging curves.

PF changes:

PF1: The flavor of coco is forever at the tip of your tongue. You can't get rid of it, making everything you eat taste like chocolate.

PF2: Warm chocolate filling replaces your insides and blood, leaking it from every orifice.

PF3: Your body takes on a more angular, sharpened shape, with your joints becoming the smooth grooves of a segmented chocolate bar.

Special: An Inheritor with three of more attribute changes on this floor gains the following abilities:

Replaceable Parts: You can incorporate other candy pieces into your body to heal yourself.

Sweet Filling: Whenever you are injured, Lompras know where you are and will seek you out.

SECOND FLOOR: BLUEBERRIES

An impenetrable wall of mist swirls below a sea of treetop branches, obscuring the beginning and end of this fathomless forest. Scant patches of factory technology are all that remain beneath the sprawl of roots and piles of overripe sugar berries. To return this jungle to some semblance of order, the Inheritors will need to violently hack away at the overgrown vegetation and locate the dehumidifier facility. Once the fog is dissipated, the forest's produce needs proper pesticides.

Dangers on this floor include:

- Candy-craving carnivorous plants.
- Pulled into grainy molasses quicksand.
- Inhaling hallucinogenic swamp mist.
- Punctured by spikey sugar cane trees.
- Tangled up in black licorice vines.
- Bitten by corrosive sour snakes.
- Lost in endless weave of berry bramble.
- Acid-filled Lompras.

This floor should test the Inheritor's fear of nature, trusting their companions to cut a path forward and not lead them into an ambush.

SECOND FLOOR PHYSICAL CHANGES

PA changes:

PA1: Your skin turns bright blue, or grape purple.

PA2: Your hair twists into a bush of green leaves and your belly button pops into a flowering vine.

PA3: Your stomach bloats outwards with gallons of sloshing berry juice while your limbs suck inwards into short stumpy cones at your sides.

PF changes:

PF1: The flavor of fruit juice is forever at the tip of your tongue. You can't get rid of it, making everything you eat taste like sweet berries.

PF2: Your insides ripen into solid berry flesh, dozens of seeds within you that flush on your skin.

PF3: Your body shape becomes much more spherical and rotund, merging your torso, hips, and neck into one smooth berry ball.

Special: An Inheritor with three of more attribute changes on this floor gains the following abilities:

Durable Body: Permanent +1 to all PF draws.

Immobile Body: If you are stationary, vines will root you to the ground and swell your body, giving you -2 to PA draws when not moving.

THIRD FLOOR: COWS

Stark plains of flat salt rock and loosed farm animals as far as the horizon, this floor is the first hint that the factory is larger on the inside. There is no visible sun, as a constant torrential downpour of milk covers the sky. The Inheritors will have to journey across the blank fields for what will feel like days to find the broken weather control devices and subdue the storm. Once the air is cleared, they can begin the task of rounding up all the free animals back to their labeled barns.

Dangers on this floor include:

- Swept up by powdered sugar dust tornado.
- Drenched in destructive milk monsoon.
- Gored by agitated red bulls.
- Collapsed under soggy gingerbread houses.
- Stampede of escape caramel cattle.
- Skewered on dangling peppermint hooks.
- Petrified by infectious rock candy crystals.
- Horned Lompras.

This floor should test the Inheritor's fear of wide-open spaces, trusting their companions across barren fields where there is nowhere to hide.

THIRD FLOOR PHYSICAL CHANGES

PA changes:

PA1: Your skin grows black and white spotted fur.

PA2: Your abdomen swells into a turgid udder with four pink puffy teats that dribble milk.

PA3: Your face pushes out into a broad cow snout, your spine grows out a rope-like tail, while your hands and feet crust with keratin into cow hooves.

PF changes:

PF1: The flavor of milk is forever at the tip of your tongue. You can't get rid of it, making everything you eat taste like a rich smoothie.

PF2: Your organs and muscles soften into supple milk candy and your teeth flatten to chew gum.

PF3: Your shoulder joint shift and your arms lengthen to favor a quadruped stance, fixing you to a comfortable posture for walking on all fours.

Special: An Inheritor with three of more attribute changes on this floor gains the following abilities:

Milk Dipped: You can spray milk that is highly acidic to all other candy people and Lompras.

Animal Brain: Your overall intelligence drops a little. Take -1 on all MF draws.

FOURTH FLOOR: SHARKS

Sugar water immediately floods the elevator doors upon opening, as this floor is nearly completely beneath sea level. Floating Polvoron sand islands dot the surface as the only places to stand. Untamed heat from the raging artificial sun has bleached the candy rock coral and withered the fish. The Inheritors will need to locate the temperature control devices before they can cast out the fishing nets to prune the numbers of invasive Swedish fish species.

Dangers on this floor include:

- Falling into unmarked peach ring portal.
- Constricting tentacles of a gummy kraken.
- Merging with swarm of sticky Swedish fish.
- Snagged by candy string drag nets.
- Swimming against gelatin whirlpool.
- Infested with parasitic sour worms.
- Jolted by electrical sour ribbon eels.
- Aquatic Lompras.

This floor should test the Inheritor's fear of wild beasts, trusting their companions to distract the predators and not leave them for fish food.

FOURTH FLOOR PHYSICAL CHANGES

PA changes:

PA1: Your skin turns foam blue with a white belly.

PA2: Your butt spreads out to birth a thick shark tail with dorsal fins growing over your back.

PA3: Your face sharpens into a pointy shark snout with sawblade teeth, while your hands fold and flatten into wide fish flippers.

PF changes:

PF1: The flavor of sour sugar is forever at the tip of your tongue. You can't get rid of it, making everything you eat taste like gummi candy.

PF2: Your inner flesh is replaced by translucent gummy gel surrounded by a layer of squishy jello.

PF3: All your bony angles smooth out into wobbling round bumps of gummy glycerine with your hair lumping into strand of licorice.

Special: An Inheritor with three or more attribute changes on this floor gains the following abilities:

Shark Attack: You gain a bite attack and tail weapon, as well as +1 to PA draws when in water.

Flipper Hands: You can no longer hold multiple objects at once, and you can't use complex tools.

FIFTH FLOOR: MARSHMALLOWS

The gnashing noise of machine teeth roars through the narrow hallways of this penultimate floor. Haywire service robots and hyperactive confectioner equipment make this floor more deadly than any other. Those further along in their transformation to candy will only be reshaped by these otherwise lethal kitchen gadgets. The Inheritors must placate the churning factory heart with fresh candy from other floors for a chance at finding the off switch to this industrial madness.

Dangers on this floor include:

- Squished with malfunctioning steel pistons.
- Locked within oven baking chamber.
- Chopped and sliced by mechanical blades.
- Frozen inside ice cube tray conveyor belt.
- Fused to sticky marshmallow flesh mass.
- Spun into bits by accelerated mixing bowl.
- Flattened by runaway rolling pins.
- Cybernetically enhanced Lompras.

This floor should test the Inheritor's fear of bodily harm, trusting their companions to brave the traps together and not pick off the injured.

FIFTH FLOOR PHYSICAL CHANGES

PA changes:

PA1: Your skin turns stark white, or peanut orange.

PA2: Your midsection widens with sizeable paunch and your fingers thicken into plump sausage rolls.

PA3: Your joints cleave into chunky detachable marshmallow segments as your cheeks and chest balloon with jiggling fat.

PF changes:

PF1: The flavor of vanilla crème is forever at the tip of your tongue. You can't get rid of it, making everything you eat taste like fluffy marshmallow.

PF2: Your bones and ligaments bend and flop into spongy marshmallow support structures.

PF3: Your whole body takes on a taller, more cylindrical shape, appendages built from tied and folded marshmallow tubes.

Special: An Inheritor with three of more attribute changes on this floor gains the following abilities:

Durable Body and Replaceable Parts as above.

Melting: The heat of this floor causes you to stick to the ground. You can't free yourself from this floor without help from two other Inheritors.

FINALE

When the Inheritors have fixed at least two floors or are suitable exhausted by through their efforts, Margret will urge them to meet her on the sixth floor to prepare for opening the final door. The final floor is a series of thin walkways that stretch over a dark abyss. At the center is a long staircase, that reaches up to where the biometric scanner awaits a worthy Inhalator seeking Walder's final fortune and control of the factory.

At the bottom of the stairway, Margaret reveals the Recycling Machine, a massive laser guided torture table that can reconstitute candy people into ingredients which will repair the other floors. Clearly the Inheritors will not be able to fix every floor before they all become transformed into candy people, unless they are willing to make a sacrifice of their companions.

Margaret Is determined and will not allow the Inheritors to leave, overpowering any who oppose her to drag them into the Recycling Machine. Only if the Inheritors are completely united will they have the strength to defeat her.

CONCLUSION

If Margaret has her way, she sacrifices all the changed Inheritors or throws them off the sixth floor, then ascends to the control panel with the help of the last remaining human(ish) Inheritor.

The control room is a literal maze of money, walls of bills that reach to the ceiling, all the factory's continual automated profits that sit gathering dust. Margaret makes her way to the factory controls, revealing her plan to use the factory's sealed basement of cybernetic technology to create a robot army. She seeks nothing less than world domination, though she offers the Inheritor a position as the public figurehead of her regime.

The last Inheritor has one more chance to defeat Margaret. If they don't see the money as walls, they can beat Margaret's pace to the control panel and destroy the factory with everyone in it.

If the Inheritors collectively haul Margaret inside the Recycling Machine, she is crushed to scrap metal. The factory will remain forever unclaimed, slowly deteriorating into peaceful obsolescence.

CHARACTER CREATION TABLES

Draw one card to find your character's Goals, and another card to find your character's Flaws.

0	Become a candy tycoon	Debilitating eating disorder
1	Learn about the factory	Sexually aroused by candy
2	Ruin this cursed family	Deeply negative self-worth
3	Eat lots of candy	Obsessed with accumulating $
4	Reunite this scattered family	Revulsion to dirt and mess
5	Prove your worth to family	Unhealthy body image
6	Solve candy conspiracy	Fixation on hopeless romance
7	Unionize the candy industry	Loath anyone taller than them
8	Humiliate fellow Inheritors	No life outside of work
9	Achieve super fame	Refuses to acknowledge limits
10	Create candy monopoly	Irrationally suspicious and prying
11	Honor Billy's legacy	Zero filter when talking
12	Spread candy across world	Total ignorance of the past
13	Ban candy from the world	No control of temper
14	Assassinate Margaret for $	Projects every failure on others
15	Make the factory your home	Never fucking shuts up
16	Use candy to further science	Disregards all persona hygiene
17	Form a candy cult	Messiah complex
18	Bored with normal life	Hypochondriac
19	Steal the family fortune	Always hides true feelings
20	Test own physical abilities	Incredibly stubborn or dense
21	Hoping for candy related TF	Cries at slightest pressure

HOW TO RUN CANDIED BLOOD

If you've never GM'd before, don't sweat. This is simple: You're going to help the players tell a story in which they get transformed into candy. Just go moment to moment, talk to them about the factory around them, give them opportunities to change it, and show them in graphic saccharine detail what happens when it changes them back.

It's the same as telling a story around a campfire, but with your audience periodically chiming in (and maybe also being turned into smores.)

Play to find out what happens to your characters, and how far they go before they are lost completely. The players are your best source of worldbuilding. They are also the experts on their characters, and they're the people who are most invested in this story you're all telling.

The scenario is designed to encourage bleakly competitive play where they can only be one winner, so players should be rewarded for cruel cutthroat behavior.

Players can also deny the temptation and work together against Margaret, which should be encouraged if that is the direction the story begins to lean towards.

Offer a Prisoners Dilemma choice to players where any player could take everything if they chose to betray the others, but that if all of them chose cooperation they can overcome Margaret with collective power. Don't be unwilling to give the Inheritors a happy ending if the players feel they really deserved it.

If you need to split the game into two sessions due to length, end the current session on a cliffhanger by having the Inheritors stumble onto a hidden half floor of the factory: Billy's sealed archives, where the players can learn about Margaret's true intentions for the factory and a cache of anti-cybernetic weapons that could potentially help stall her.

If you want to avoid character death, you can reveal that the Recycling Machine on the sixth floor actually sends sacrificed Inheritors into the hidden floor instead of killing them.

CREDITS

Writing by Duck and Kumada1

Cover art and interior art by Mel Echavarria.

Lompra sketch by Bilexth/MOGA.

Layout by Kumada1.

All the interior art is based off early supporters of To Change who volunteered their artistic likenesses. Glad you all enjoyed becoming candy!